Editorial in Italy. ROME, Aug. 15,-The Popolo Romano dedicates its leading article to President Roosevelt's letter to Governor Durbin, of Indiana, on lynching, which the paper calls most important document. President Roosevelt, it says, lets no occasion escape him of bringing forward his own personality and resolutely opposing existing prejudices and abuses.

However, says the Popolo Romano, whose article was evidently inspired. President Roosevelt does not touch the international question connected with these barbarous abuses. The paper "hopes" that the words of President Roosevelt will encourage the other Governors in the United States to imitate Governor Durbin and have lynching disappear from American civilization, thus not only affirming the principle of human solid arity across the ocean, but making a definite statement toward harmonizing scientific and industrial development with moral progress.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. LAFAYETTE, Ind., Aug. 15.-While riding on the front end of a switch engine in the Big Four yards this morning, Harry Brighty, son of the Clover Leaf yardmaster at Frankfort, fell beneath the wheels of the engine and his head was horribly mutilated. Brighty was holding to the rod on the pilot, when the rod gave way and he fell directly in front of the engine, which was going at the rate of six miles an hour. His feet caught on the step and he did not leave the engine, which fact accounts for his not being killed. When he fell, Brighty ran along in front of the engine for a few steps on his hands, but lost ground and could not keep the pace. His head rested on the rails, and the flange of the wheels passed over his left side, laying open the jaw and parts of the skull, leaving a gaping wound. Taxable-Indiana News.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. FORT WAYNE, Ind., Aug. 15 .- There is deep-seated indignation pervading the music-loving public of this city against the Winona management and the Pennsylvania railroad, due to exasperating experiences during the present week. The concerts given by the Creatore orchestra, together with a low railroad rate, have taken over thousands of people, packing the outgoing trains to suffocation. The railroad company has, however, failed to furnish cars enough to bring the people home. After the Thursday night performance there were two coaches on the regular train which pulled out at the station after the concert. The seats were already filled, and people piled in until all the cars were packed like an Illinois-street car at 6 o'clock. Those who secured standing room in the cars made no impression on the 1,500 who were just as anxious to get home. There was nothing to do but wait until an appeal could be sent to Fort Wayne for an extra train. The night was exceedingly chilly, and many of the women had taken only their light wraps, thinking they would be safely at home before midnight. It was after 1 o'clock before the extra train arrived and 3 o'clock when they reached ome, having then to walk long distances, because the street cars were not running at that hour. The three hours' wait for the train without seats in the dark at the staion, with the electric lights out, the assemnight before when asked by some friends by rules requiring all lights out at 10:30 o'clock, has aroused men to profaulty to whom oaths are, as a rule, utter strangers. Many were injured in health by the exposure. This was not the only instance of his engine for the least coal. This, with of indifference to the comfort of the people during the week.

Tacties of the Muskallonge Imitated

By a Wall-Eyed Pike.

Just as there are some animals that tower above their fellows in strength and brain, so occasionally an angler meets a wall-eyed pike that shows temper and gameness, though this fish is generally fit only for the table, and affords the fisherman no sport at all. E. R. Sedgwick, of St.

Paul, struck one recently in a lake stream and endeavoring to make off down stream. forcing Sedgwick to give thirty feet of line pefore he could get it turned. Once it was headed up stream it hung on heavily, now and then shaking its head in its efforts to get rid of the barbs. This is exactly what a dragged muskallonge does, and neither the angler nor his guide had any idea other than that a muskallonge of size had been hooked. After it had been dragged half a mile the fish showed its back for an instant above the surface and tried to roll over on the line and wrap it around its body. This, too, is a muskallonge trick resorted to when the fish is getting tired. Both Sedgwick and the guide saw the back and both thought it a muskallonge back. They were undeceived five minutes later, when the pike returned to its pike nature, threw its head down, stuck its tail up and bored heavily to the bottom, going until its nose struck the sand, straightening out and permitting the line to haul it along. This was continued for a few minutes when the boat was stopped and Sedgwick got the fish up by a series of savage jerks, almost hard enough to break out the hooks. It was about all in when it reached the surface. It was brought alongside and

This was a true wall-eyed pike, with the big, round, goggle eyes, yellowish skin and thick, fat body of its kind. It weighed thirteen pounds nine ounces, which is close to the record. There is talk of a wall-ever like taken from the Chippewa river in Wisconsin four years ago which weighed eighteen pounds and a tale of another from Squaw lake, in Vilas county, in the same State, which weighed sixteen pounds, but these stories are not well authenticated. Wall-eyed pike, probably the most delicious table fish of all inland swimmers, do
